Dr Sofia Yatsyuk is a Ukrainian-British concert violinist and teacher, who has enchanted audiences and critics around the world, becoming a highly sought-after performer and collaborator. A graduate of the Purcell School of Music and the Royal Academy of Music, Sofia completed her masters and doctorate degrees at McGill University in violin performance.

As an award-winning violinist, Sofia made her orchestral debut with the Ternopil Symphony Orchestra in 2014 and has performed as a soloist and a chamber musician in Ukraine, Italy, Slovenia, Poland, China, Canada, France, United States, and the United Kingdom, including performances at Giuseppe Tartini's house in Slovenia, the Parliament building in London, Wigmore Hall, and Carnegie Hall in New York. In 2024, Sofia was the recipient of McGill University's Graduate Excellence fellowship award, the Heinz Saueressig award for academic excellence, the Josephat Jean Foundation's doctoral award and the Marusia Yaworska scholarship award. While completing her doctorate, Sofia taught violin at McGill University, where she also coached chamber music and led orchestral sectionals. As a passionate educator, her teaching philosophy is built on adapting her methods to nurture every student's individual creativity. She focuses on the development and the continuous evolution of a strong technical base, the understanding and implementation of deliberate practice methods and their relationship to performance practice techniques. As a certified yogi, Sofia incorporates the importance of physical awareness and breath work into her teaching, addressing injury prevention and warm up techniques.

Sofia recently released her first solo album titled 'Silent Voices, Intertwined Paths' featuring the violin and piano sonatas of composers Rebecca Clarke and Ethel Smyth. The Strad magazine published Sofia's article promoting the album, celebrating women composers in classical music.
